

I'm just a Psychologist, but I think the proposed changes are not in the public interest.

I believe this because in today's age of "MTV culture", --where TV news is the biggest, most influential source of information-- too much consolidation is not in the public interest, as it limits input opportunities (i.e., control of TV by fewer parties).

As the FCC is guided by the public interest, it makes sense to maintain the current limited distribution, in order to provide opportunity to a broader array of input, by limiting the total amount controlled by a few. For example news: research shows that almost 50% of news is really advertising (VNR's).

I hope you consider this viewpoint. The only winner in the proposed change is business interests. Business interest is oriented towards only one thing: profit. Profit generally benefits a few, versus the public interest. Public interest is the FCC mandate, isn't it?

Thank you for consideration.

j taylor